Look Ahead America's Got More Georgia Election Investigations Open

Washington, DC – There are now at least five official election related investigations in Georgia due to work from the Research Group at Look Ahead America (LAA): the previously announced case involving two voters registered at P.O. Boxes in Oconee County, one each in Toombs County, Candler County, and one in Texas involving a Thomas County voter. Each of these three are out of state subsequent registrations, that is, people who registered to vote in Georgia, then registered to vote in a new state, and then returned to vote in Georgia. There is also a review underway in Georgia's Department of Driver Services Office of Investigative Services involving the 1,401 voters who potentially misled the state and registered at false addresses that we submitted.

Ian Camacho, Director of Research stated:

At last our claims are being taken seriously and investigated. This validates all our tranches and methodology that critics have dismissed previously because it didn't fit their narratives. Previously, Secretary of State Brad Raffensperger confirmed using the NCOA to remove 100,000 voters. Other clerks have done so in our follow up contacts, which we will publish soon.

This doesn't just clean the voter rolls but gets at the root of election vulnerability: registrations validated at the Department of Motor Vehicles in all states appear to be a common denominator, which we first discovered in Wisconsin.

Voters should submit similar finds to their own DMV for investigation as we believe that we have found the root cause. Sending illegal registrations to the clerks and SOS offices will only remove the voter and potentially the location, but it won't penalize the crime nor handle the underlying and overlooked vulnerability. Doing this will tighten voter integrity and bring to light several other illegal issues that the state didn't know was going on under its nose.
